R-50 Systems, LLC Unveils One-Inch (1") Thick R-50 Value Insulation with Net Zero Capability. Patented, certified innovation cuts energy consumption, reduces renovation and building costs, and provides unmatched design freedom.

Kennett Square, Pennsylvania (October 4, 2016) – R-50 Systems, LLC, launched a new-to-market, 1" thick vacuum-sealed, patented and certified R-50 value insulation. This high-performance product not only delivers government mandated R-values in the slimmest profile ever, but it is a green, sustainable, ultra-thin insulation solution with measurable advantages over alternative products.

Conventional insulation requires thicknesses of up to 15" to reach an R-Value of 50. R-50 Systems' Rich-E-Board™ provides this same R value at 1". The ultra-thin, lightweight design decreases costs of building modifications and structural retrofits, while creating more usable space for living and/or operations. Because Rich-E-Board is cut-to-spec, it can be used in any and all building and wall applications with little wasted material.

Rich-E-Board's total cost of ownership and installation is far less than that of traditional insulation. Although the upfront rates per square foot of alternative products are lower, R-50 Systems has cut the total costs of 100,000 sq. ft. projects by more than 20%.

Rich-E-Board™ is 99% recyclable, reusable, and reclaimable, reducing the amount of landfill waste by over 8 times. GSA simulations have shown that this product can reduce electric and gas bills by 8% and 10%, respectively.

"Our vision was to solve the dilemma of high R-value mandates and the limitations posed by space constraints, which we have more than achieved," says Joanne Collins, President and CEO of R-50 Systems, LLC. "Rich-E-Board is without a doubt a better way of envisioning, planning, and constructing a building."

Contractors, architects, building owners, and government decision-makers have specified Rich-E-Board for universities, courthouses, medical centers, and other commercial buildings.
